

CREEPLY CONSTRUCTION

TOP 10

HAUNTED PROJECTS

1

POINSETT BRIDGE

GREENVILLE, SOUTH CAROLINA

The stone bridge is the oldest in South Carolina's history, built in 1820. Legend has it that a series of creepy events occurred at the site, including a mason who died during its construction and is now entombed inside. Visitors have claimed to have experienced everything from unexplained lights to undistinguishable voices while visiting the site.

A low-angle, upward-looking photograph of the San Fernando Cathedral in San Antonio, Texas. The image shows the intricate Gothic architecture of the cathedral's facade, including tall, narrow windows with pointed arches, a large rose window, and stone masonry. The sky is a deep, dark blue with some light clouds. The overall tone is dramatic and historical.

2

SAN FERNANDO CATHEDRAL

SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS

Construction teams are all too familiar with renovations that unearth unusual surprises. But for the team working on the San Fernando Cathedral, it was a new level of bone-chilling. When construction workers renovated the oldest church in Texas, they unearthed the remains of three soldiers of the Alamo. Today, visitors claim to have seen shadowy figures and other movements that leave them with chills.

3

WOODCHESTER MANSION

NYMPSFIELD, ENGLAND

Unfinished projects are a fear of every construction team. In the case of the Woodchester Mansion, construction workers abandoned the build in 1873 when the owner, William Leigh, suddenly died. While the reason for their abandonment isn't entirely clear, it's claimed that to make room for the new build, Leigh had to demolish an existing house at the location, reportedly causing a series of vicious hauntings.

An aerial photograph of the Las Vegas skyline, featuring numerous skyscrapers and city buildings. The image is overlaid with a semi-transparent teal color, creating a dark, moody atmosphere. The text is positioned on the left side of the image.

4

5285 DEAN MARTIN DRIVE

LAS VEGAS, NEVADA

Construction on the new Raiders' stadium in Las Vegas has begun. However, just north of the NFL team's future stadium lies the Dean Martin property—with a reportedly haunted past. In fact, even though the property was only built in 1991, after several unexplained incidents, in 2009, a paranormal team was actually called in to collect evidence.

5

UNIVERSITY OF MISSISSIPPI MEDICAL CENTER JACKSON, MISSISSIPPI

Construction workers beginning a parking lot for the University of Mississippi Medical Center had a particularly dreadful surprise after breaking ground. They came across nearly 7,000 bodies of former Mississippi State Lunatic Asylum residents. While it was a common practice at the turn of the century to bury deceased patients in unmarked graves, the $21 million cost to remove and rebury the remains would be enough to give all contractors a fright.

6

SANZHI UFO HOUSES

SAN ZHI, TAIWAN

Sometimes the scariest things are what's unknown. In the case of the Sanzhi UFO Houses, construction of this unique township began quite normally. Nevertheless, construction was never completed, leaving the site deserted. The reason? The mystery remains unsolved today. After nearly 30 years of idleness, the houses were eventually demolished to begin construction for a commercial resort.

7

WINCHESTER MYSTERY HOUSE

SAN JOSE, CALIFORNIA

The Winchester Mystery House remains one of the top creepiest construction projects ever due to the reason it was built in the first place. After Sara Winchester's husband and child died, a seer informed her that her family was killed by ghosts. To defend against vengeful spirits, she commissioned a Victorian fun-house. The building contains a slew of hidden and haunting features including windows that lead to secret passages and staircases into ceilings.

8

SUNSHINE 60

TOKYO, JAPAN

Unsafe construction sites are a common scary issue on projects. However, construction of Tokyo's Sunshine 60 took jobsite dangers to the extreme. The project was full of many setbacks and freak accidents, resulting in an unusual number of worker deaths. Even previously tested safety equipment would fail at a moments notice causing many to circulate rumors that the site was haunted by spirits of the Sugamo Prison. Nonetheless, the site officially opened to the public in 1978.

9

READ DUNNING SCHOOL

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS

The Dunning neighborhood school is another example of choosing an unfortunate location for a build. The 15-year and $70 million build remains tricky for construction workers who are attempting to carefully avoid an estimated 38,000 people buried in unmarked graves. The remains are from the grounds of the former Cook County Poor House, a county insane asylum, who buried residents and patients who were too poor to afford funerals.

10

WONDERLAND AMUSEMENT PARK

BEIJING, CHINA

Sometimes there are just powers bigger than us. In the case of this Beijing amusement park, it was bureaucratic. Due to a disagreement with the local government, the massive and unfinished structures are all that's left of the Wonderland Amusement Park in Beijing, China. The park remains a deserted tourist attraction to this day.

